*While ADSL Max can offer greatly increased line speed performance, when compared to existing products it should be noted that 8 Mbps is a theoretical maximum speed at the highest end of the scale. The maximum speed is determined by factors such as the length and quality of the copper telephone line to the telephone exchange, local electromagnetic or radio interference, and the quality of the end user microfilter and modem.

It should also be noted that ADSL MAX is a rate-adaptive product. This means that the speed at which it downloads and uploads will fluctuate. These fluctuations may also change over time in response to any change in line or the environmental conditions mentioned above.

Upon completion this form should be returned by post to:
